CAUGHT A TARTAR.

Cross Examination. "The purpose of a cross examination in a law case," said a judge, "is to try to break down the testimony of a witness, but sometimes even the smartest lawyer catches a tartar and instead of breaking down the witness he himself is all broken up. I will never forget an answer made to me by a He brew witness who was the complainant in a burglary case in a county court. He charged the young gentleman whom I was defending with breaking open the door of his apartment above his tailor shop. On direct examination he testified that the alleged burglar had broken the chain on the inside of the door. I started in to cross examine with that ease of manner which characterizes every lawyer who has a good point up his sleeve. In my sweetest tones I asked:

'Now, my dear sir, you say this boy broke in your door?' "'Yes, sir.'

that was fastened on the inside?" "'Yes, sir.' "'Now will you tell me how any man on the outside of a door could possibly unfasten a chain that was on the inside?

"'And you say he broke the chain

'How should I know? Vy don't you ask him? Dat's his business. I'm a tailor. He's a tief!" "That cross examination came to a full stop then and there."-Brooklyn Eagle. An Easy Medical Degree. Time was when medical degrees were obtained at St. Andrews without all the difficulties of today, and the story is told concerning a learned professor of old, who had advised a particular student whom he had never seen in the fiesh and of whose work he knew but little, to call upon him at his house so that he might be examined for his degree. The morning was a brilliant one, and the learned gentleman found it impossible to resist the attractions of the links. Before setting out, however, he had left a message with one of the maidservants, and a conversation like the following ensued on the arrival of the student at the appointed time: "Ar you the gentleman who was to call this morning about a degree?" asked the girl on opening the door. "I am," was the reply. "Well," said the maid, "I was to tell you that it was all right. You have passed."-Scotsman. Not Just What He Said. A well known parson, preaching to a crowded congregation at a church where in his younger days he had been curate, alluded to the many changes that had taken place. He contrasted the attendance with that of days gone by and remarked, "At one time in this church there was not a soul-er-person in the gallery." Next day, in a report of the service which appeared in one of the local newspapers, the minister was reported to have said. "At one time in this church there was not a sober person in the gallery."-Exchange.

Seizing His Opportunity. Wife-Mrs. Bowen's house is strictly up to date, with electric appliances throughout. All she has to do is to touch a button and almost any desired result is accomplished. Husband-Well, you would never be able to get results in that way, my dear. Wife-Why not? Husband-Because you seem to have a horror of touching buttons. Just look at my clothes.
